Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

00 1286 FEB 9 2001

OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. ____

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

v.

GARRY V. GIDDENS,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

HARLAN D. BURKHEAD*
TODD E. HILTON
LATHROP & GAGE L.C.
2345 Grand Boulevard, Suite 2500
Kansas City, Missouri 64108
(816) 292-2000

Counsel of Record* Counsel for Petitioner

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D. C. 20001

82 pp

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether a jury, which had heard a FELA plaintiff's evidence that he had earnings loss damages of over $1,000,000, should have been prevented from hearing the railroad's evidence that (a) the plaintiff was already receiving disability benefits of over $18,000 annually, 76.6% of which had been funded by the railroad, and (b) the plaintiff was demotivated to mitigate his earnings loss by finding gainful employment because such earnings would decrease his disability benefits.

Alternatively, if the jury was properly precluded by law from hearing relevant evidence of the true extent of the plaintiff's net earnings loss, whether the railroad should have been granted an offset against the jury's $1,520,000 verdict in the amount of the present value of such benefits, so that the plaintiff not receive a windfall double recovery.

2. Whether a state court may promulgate a jury instruction and verdict form for FELA pure comparative negligence cases against a railroad materially different from the jury instruction and verdict form promulgated for pure comparative negligence actions against all other citizens of the state.

Correspondingly, whether a state court's FELA verdict form, materially different from the verdict form promulgated for all other pure comparative negligence cases, which precludes meaningful review of whether a verdict in an FELA case is against the weight of the evidence denies due process and equal protection of the laws to railroads.

LIST OF PARTIES AND CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

The parties to this proceeding are the petitioner-defendant, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company and the respondent-plaintiff, Garry Vance Giddens.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Kansas City Southern Lines, Inc., which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Kansas City Southern Industries, Inc., which is publicly held.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTIONS PRESENTED	i
LIST OF PARTIES AND CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT	ii
OPINION BELOW	1
JURISDICTION	1
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS & STATUTE INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	3
1. Legal precedent and case facts material to exclusion of respondent's receipt of Railroad Retirement Act ("RRA") benefits	3
A. Legal Precedent	3
B. The law qualifying a railroad employee to apply for RRA benefits	4
C. Facts as to how Giddens accrued his 20 years of service	4
D. Evidence received and excluded on Giddens' earnings loss damages	5
2. Legal precedent and procedural facts material to consideration of whether the State of Missouri's requiring different forms of verdicts in pure comparative negligence cases (a) against railroads and (b) against any other citizen defendant frustrates railroads' rights to meaningful review of jury verdicts and constitutes denial of equal protection of the law	6
A. The different forms of instructions and verdicts	6
B. Facts material to consideration of the issue of Giddens' fault	7

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 8

I. The Writ Should Be Allowed In Order To Resolve A Split Among The Circuits And State Supreme Courts And To Allow For The First Time Ever Before This Court Full Briefing, Argument And Consideration Of (A) Whether RRA Benefits Are From A "Collateral Source", And (B) Whether There Should Be A Per Se Rule Excluding The Receipt Of Such Evidence Or Whether Such Ruling Should Be Left To Trial Court Discretion As Are Other Evidentiary Matters Under Rule 403, Federal Rules Of Evidence And State Court Rules Of Evidence 8

A. RRA benefits are not collateral source 8

B. Whether RRA benefits should be admissible in evidence in a FELA trial for purposes other than as an offset to damages should be expressly left to trial court discretion and not be a matter of per se rule exclusion 12

C. There is conflict among the Circuits and state courts of highest resort as to the important federal question presented by Eichel 15

D. Giddens manipulated the system to accrue his 20 years of service for RRA eligibility 16

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

E. As an alternative to admission of RRA evidence at trial before the jury, at the very least, KCS, and all railroads, should be allowed an offset against a plaintiff's damages determined by the jury in the amount of the present value of the RRA benefits so that the plaintiff not receive a windfall double recovery 18

F. Conclusion 18

II. The Missouri Courts' Requirement That FELA Litigants Utilize A Form Of Verdict Materially Different From The Form Of Verdict Utilized In All Other Similar Comparative Negligence Actions Violates The Supremacy, Equal Protection And Due Process Clauses Of The United States Constitution And Conflicts With The Decisions Of This Court 19

A. States may not discriminate against FELA actions 19

B. The Missouri courts' requirement that FELA litigants utilize a form of verdict that precludes meaningful appellate review of the jury verdict violates the equal protection and due process clauses of the United States Constitution and conflicts with the decisions of this Court... 22

1. The Missouri instructional scheme violates due process..... 22

2. The Missouri instructional scheme violates equal protection..... 24

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

3. The Missouri state instructional scheme is in conflict with instructions of the Eighth Circuit federal scheme and all other jurisdictions' schemes 26

CONCLUSION 28

APPENDIX

Opinion of Missouri Supreme Court dated October 17, 2000 ..... 1a

Motion for Rehearing 25a

Memorandum Order Denying Rehearing 34a

Missouri Approved Instructions (MAI)

MAI 8.02 ..... 35a

MAI 36.01 ..... 36a

MAI 37.03 ..... 37a

MAI 37.07 ..... 38a

Eichel v. New York Central Railroad Co 39a

Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. § 51 ..... 43a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES:	Page
Bennett v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 896 S.W.2d 464, 467 (Mo. 1995)	27
City of Chesterfield v. Director of Revenue, 811 S.W.2d 375, 378 (Mo. 1991)	27
Dice v. Akron, Canton & Youngstown R.R. Co., 342 U.S. 359, 365, 367-68 (1952)	19
EEOC v. Wyoming Retirement Systems, 771 F.2d 1425, 1431-32 (10th Cir. 1985)	18
Eichel v. New York Central Railroad, 375 U.S. 253 (1963)	passim
Giddens v. Kansas City Southern, 29 S.W. 3d 813	15, 24
Green v. Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad, 59 F.3d 1029 (10th Cir. 1995)	16, 18
Gustafson v. Benda, 661 S.W.2d 11 (Mo. banc 1983)	6
Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg, 512 U.S. 415, 114 S.Ct. 2331, 2338-40 (1994)	24
Janke v. Duluth & Northwestern R.R. Co., 489 N.W.2d 545 (Minn. App. 1992)	26
Jones v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 800 F.2d 590 (6th Cir. 1986)	13
Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones, 241 U.S. 181 (1916)	22
McGrath v. Consolidated Rail Corporation, 136 F.3d 838 (1st Cir. 1998)	15, 16
McKnett v. St. Louis & San Francisco R.R. Co., 292 U.S. 230, 234 (1934)	19
Merando v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co., 232 Kan. 404, 656 P.2d 154 (1982)	26
Missouri ex rel. Southern Ry. Co. v. Mayfield, 340 U.S. 1, 4 (1950)	19

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Missouri Pacific R.R. Co. v. Brown, 862 S.W.2d 636 (Tex. App. [Tyler] 1993)	26
Mondou v. New York & New Haven R.R. Co., 223 U.S. 1, 57-59 (1912)	21
New York v. U. S., 505 U.S. 144, 148 (1992)	21
O'Ryan v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 255 Ill. App.3d 214, 626 N.E.2d 374, 193 Ill. Dec. 341 (1993)	26
Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 499 U.S. 1, 20, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 1044 (1991)	24
Propeller Monticello v. Mollison, 15 U.S. (17 How.) 152, 15 L.Ed. 68 (1854)	10
Roth v. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co., 912 S.W.2d 583, 591 (Mo. App. [W.D.] 1995)	26, 27
Sheey v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co., 631 F.2d 649 (9th Cir. 1980)	16
Sinclair v. Long Island R.R., 985 F.2d 74 (2d Cir. 1993)	26
St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. v. Dickerson, 470 U.S. 409, 411 (1985)	27
St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grider, 321 Ark. 84, 900 S.W.2d 530 (1995)	26
Topping v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 1 F.3d 260 (4th Cir. 1993)	26
Trejo v. Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., 568 F.2d 181 (10th Cir. 1977)	13
Wilson v. Burlington Northern R.R. Co., 804 F.2d 607 (10th Cir. 1986)	26
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES:
28 U.S.C. § 1257(a)	1
45 U.S.C. § 231a(a)(1)(iv)	4
45 U.S.C. § 51	2, 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

45 U.S.C. § 53 ..... 6, 24, 25
U.S. CONST. amend. V 2, 23
U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 3
U.S. CONST. art. IV, cl. 2 23
U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 2 2

MISCELLANEOUS:

MAI 36.01 ..... 6, 7, 21, 22
MAI 37.03 ..... 6, 7, 20
MAI 37.07 ..... 6, 7, 20
MAI 8.02 ..... 6, 7, 21, 24

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

No. _____

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

v.

GARRY V. GIDDENS,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri

---

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company hereby petitions this Court for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri is reported at 29 S.W.3d 813 (Appendix to Petition for Certiorari) ("App.") (1a-24a). The Memorandum Order of the Supreme Court of Missouri denying rehearing is noted in the Opinion and attached (App. 34a).

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri was entered on October 17, 2000. The Motion for Rehearing was denied on November 14, 2000. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C §1257(a).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS & STATUTE INVOLVED

This action was commenced under and is governed by the Federal Employers' Liability Act ("FELA"), 45 U.S.C. § 51, et seq. Section 51 reads in pertinent part: [1]

> Every common carrier by railroad while engaged in commerce between any of the several States or Territories . . . shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce . . . for such injury . . . resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier . . . .

Constitutional provisions involved are:

U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 2

> This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

U.S. CONST. amend. V

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

---

[1] The full text of 45 U.S.C. §51 is set forth at App. 43a.

U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company ("KCS"), prays review of an opinion affirming a $1,520,000.00 jury verdict and judgment in favor of respondent, Garry Giddens, an employee of petitioner. Giddens was a foreman in the track maintenance-of-way department who sustained permanent injury to his left hand when a cable suspended from a crane broke causing the suspended load, a section of ties with track attached, to drop a few inches and pin Giddens' left hand between the track-tie assembly and a tie on which he had rested his hand.

1. Legal precedent and case facts material to exclusion of respondent's receipt of Railroad Retirement Act ("RRA") benefits.

A. Legal Precedent

In 1963 this Court handed down its opinion in Eichel v. New York Central Railroad, 375 U.S. 253 (1963) (App. 39a). Eichel has been construed to preclude evidence in a FELA case that the plaintiff is receiving RRA benefits and has been the source of misconstruction, vexation, confusion and millions of dollars of double recovery benefits against railroads.

This important federal question regarding the admissibility or exclusion of RRA disability benefits in the trial of a FELA case first arose in the pre-trial motion in limine filed by Giddens, in which he sought an order excluding from evidence "any mention whatsoever . . . of any and all references concerning . . . receipt or entitlement to receive benefits under the Disability Act of the Railroad Retirement Administration . . . ." KCS agreed that due to the constraint of the Eichel opinion as interpreted by subsequent opinions, petitioner would not make mention nor attempt to offer evidence unless respondent "opened the door" to the receipt of such evidence.

B. The law qualifying a railroad employee to apply for RRA benefits

Under 45 U.S.C. § 231a(a)(1)(iv), Giddens, in order to qualify for an occupational disability annuity under the RRA had to establish to the Railroad Retirement Board's satisfaction both that he was disabled from work in his regular occupation and that he had completed 20 years of service with the railroad.

C. Facts as to how Giddens accrued his 20 years of service

At the time of his injury in May, 1989, Giddens had accrued 16 years of service, 4 years short of that required by § 231a(a)(1)(iv). He convalesced from his injury for 13 months until June, 1990, during which time KCS continued to pay his wages under a wage continuation program and contributed to Tier II of the Railroad Retirement System, out of which occupational disability benefits are paid. He then returned to work at his same job as a maintenance-of-way foreman in June, 1990 and worked through December, 1990, at which time he laid off for additional treatment, again receiving wage continuation with employer contributions to Railroad Retirement. He returned again to his regular job in May, 1991 and worked through December, 1991. He worked no further for the railroad thereafter. However, KCS continued his wage continuation benefits and Railroad Retirement contributions through October 1992.

By October, 1992, Giddens had also accrued vacation time and personal leave days which he was able to allocate to separate future months, and when those benefits were paid to him, contributions were made to Railroad Retirement, thus allowing him to attain the requisite 240 months of accredited service. In October 1992, realizing that he had accrued sufficient vacation and personal leave days which he could take day-at-a-time in separate months to obtain the additional required months of accredited service, Giddens advised that he was no longer physically able to do the job which he had done in the past for the railroad. He filed suit against the respondent in November 1992. Thereafter he applied for and was awarded RRA benefits.

D. Evidence received and excluded on Giddens' earnings loss damages

The jury heard evidence from two physicians that Giddens had work restrictions with respect to his injured hand, with resultant 18% body as a whole disability. It also heard from the plaintiff's vocational expert that Giddens was "well-motivated" to return to work. Finally, the jury heard from the plaintiff's economist that Giddens, age 44 at time of trial in 1998, had sustained a $204,600 past wage loss and would sustain a future wage loss projected as high as $812,000. The jury was precluded by the court's rulings from hearing that Giddens was receiving over $18,000 per year in RRA benefits, that the fund out of which these benefits were paid was funded 76.6% by KCS and that Giddens would have a dollar-for-dollar reduction of his RRA benefits for each dollar earnings which he had in excess of $400 per month.

2. Legal precedent and procedural facts material to consideration of whether the State of Missouri's requiring different forms of verdicts in pure comparative negligence cases (a) against railroads and (b) against any other citizen defendant frustrates railroads' rights to meaningful review of jury verdicts and constitutes denial of equal protection of the law.

A. The different forms of instructions and verdicts

The Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. § 51, et seq., is a system of "pure" comparative negligence or fault, i.e. contributory negligence of the plaintiff diminishes, but does not bar, recovery and the plaintiff is entitled to recover that amount of his total damages which corresponds to the employer's percentage of negligence. 45 U.S.C. § 53.

In Gustafson v. Benda, 661 S.W.2d 11 (Mo. banc 1983), the Supreme Court of Missouri abolished contributory negligence as an absolute defense in Missouri and adopted pure comparative negligence under the Uniform Comparative Fault Act.

Notwithstanding the substantive parallel of the FELA to the Missouri system of comparative fault for non-FELA cases, the Supreme Court of Missouri has approved different forms of instructions for the two different causes of actions. To compare:

	FELA Cases	Other Comparative Fault Cases
Measure of damages instruction	MAI 8.02 (App. 35a)	MAI 37.03 (App. 37a)
Form of verdict	MAI 36.01 (App. 36a)	MAI 37.07 (App. 38a)

An important issue of federal law and, more fundamentally, constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection are raised by the disparate jury instruction treatment which Missouri courts accord railroad and non-railroad litigants.

The issue of how the jury was instructed first arose during the instruction conference after the evidence but before instruction, argument and submission. Petitioner urged the giving of MAI 37.03 for measure of damages (App. 37a), which the court refused but gave instead MAI 8.02 (App. 35a) the measure of damage instruction specifically crafted for FELA cases. Similarly, petitioner's proffered form of verdict under MAI 37.07 (App. 38a), the one used for all non-FELA cases, was refused in favor of MAI 36.01 (App. 36a), again an instruction used in Missouri only in application to railroads as a special "class." When the court made these decisions, petitioner excepted and raised the constitutional objection.[2]

Comparison of App. 36a to App. 38a reveals the distinction between the two instructional schemes. The scheme for railroads does not require the jury to state separately its findings as to percentages of fault and total damages. The scheme applicable to all other citizen defendants in the State of Missouri does require separate itemization of percentages of fault and damages.

B. Facts material to consideration of the issue of Giddens' fault

Giddens was the foreman in charge of the work site. There was no higher supervisor present before or at the time of the accident. It was his responsibility to determine the methods of work and to instruct other employees what to do and where to do it. He was giving hand signals to the crane operator

---

[2] "Defendant objects to the form. We will concede that this adheres to proper MAI format. We object because we believe MAI unconstitutionally discriminates against railroads by instructing in FELA cases differently than in other similar comparative fault cases." (App. 28a).

who was lifting the load which fell on his hand. He placed his hand on the tie beneath the suspended load notwithstanding a specific railroad safety rule.[3]

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. The writ should be allowed in order to resolve a split among the circuits and state supreme courts and to allow for the first time ever before this Court full briefing, argument and consideration of (a) whether RRA benefits are from a "collateral source", and (b) whether there should be a per se rule excluding the receipt of such evidence or whether such ruling should be left to trial court discretion as are other evidentiary matters under Rule 403, Federal Rules of Evidence and state court rules of evidence.

A. RRA benefits are not collateral source

Notwithstanding a plethora of state and federal court decisions citing Eichel, the fact is that this federal question of admissibility into evidence of RRA benefits, which is a matter of vast economic impact to this petitioner and the railroad industry and ultimately society as a whole, was never fully briefed, argued and considered in the Eichel decision, an opinion which was rendered in a far different time and context.

Eichel accepted the lack of dispute between the parties to that case that RRA disability benefits were a "collateral source" and then proceeded, via dicta, to say that RRA benefits are indeed a "collateral source." The Eichel court then considered only the railroad's argument that under the

---

[3] KCS Safety Rule 724 states:

> When rail is raised, or tie is being nipped up for spiking or tamping, avoid placing hands or feet in a position where injury might occur. . . .

facts of that case, the evidence of disability payments should be admissible as bearing on the issue of malingering. The Eichel opinion, which was a review of a trial court's exercise of discretion excluding RRA benefits under the facts of that case, held that the evidence of the benefits was properly excluded under the facts of that case.

Eichel merely affirmed a District Court's exercise of discretion in excluding RRA disability benefits under the facts of that FELA case. The Federal District Judge excluded the railroad's offer of evidence that the plaintiff was receiving $190 per month in RRA disability pension payments. The jury returned a verdict of $51,000.00.

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed, 319 F.2d 12, holding that it was prejudicial error to exclude the RRA evidence. This Court then reversed the Court of Appeals, effectively reinstituting the judgment and discretionary rulings of the trial judge.

Eichel is now cited as black letter law that RRA benefits are of a collateral source. Eichel is no such thing. The pertinent language is:

> Respondent (the railroad) does not dispute that it would be highly improper for the disability pension payments to be considered in mitigation of the damages suffered by petitioner.
>
> Thus it has been recognized that:
>
> > The Railroad Retirement Act is substantially a Social Security Act for employees of common carriers. * * * The benefits received under such a system of social legislation are not directly attributable to the contributions of the employer, so they cannot be considered in mitigation of the damages caused by the employer. 375 U.S. 253, 254 (emphasis and parenthetical material added).

The opinion continues:

> Respondent argues that the evidence of the disability payments although concededly inadmissible to offset or mitigate damages, is admissible as bearing on the extent and duration of the disability suffered by petitioner. Id. at 254 (emphasis added).

Thus, on the threshold issue of whether RRA disability benefits are from a collateral source, that issue was not disputed, but was instead conceded, by New York Central. The collateral source "issue" was not briefed and argued in Eichel because it was not an issue due to the railroad's concession. However, this petitioner does dispute and does not concede that RRA disability pension payments are from a collateral source. RRA benefits are paid from Tier II of the RRA, 76.6% of which is "directly attributable to the contributions of the employer." RRA benefits are not collateral source.[4]

The "collateral source rule," the wisdom of which is now significantly under challenge on many fronts, traces back to Propeller Monticello v. Mollison, 15 U.S. (17 How.) 152, 15 L.Ed. 68 (1854) in which this Court first ruled that a defendant could not mitigate its exposure by the fact that a plaintiff had received satisfaction of damages from its own insurer. This opinion evolved into what is now known as the "collateral source rule," which has now been defined:

> [I]f an injured person receives compensation for his injuries from a source wholly independent of the tort-feasor, the payment should not be deducted from the

---

[4] The Tier II fund is established by contributions from the employer and the employee. An amount equal to 21% of the employee's earnings, to a designated maximum, are contributed. The employer contributes 16.1% and the employee 4.9%. The employer's 16.1% is therefore 76.6% of the total 21% of earnings contribution.

> damages which he otherwise would collect from the tort-feasor.

Black's Law Dictionary 262 (6th Ed. 1990) (emphasis added).

RRA benefits are not "wholly independent of the tort-feasor." To the contrary, they are 76.6% dependent on the tort-feasor. RRA benefits are therefore not within the classic definition of collateral source.

RRA benefits also do not fall within the spirit and purpose underlying the collateral source rule. In 1854, when this Court first recognized the rule, it was considered that notwithstanding that the rule could provide a windfall to plaintiffs, public policy nonetheless supported the rule in order not to discourage the purchase of insurance by individuals who would lose the benefit of their premium dollars should the insurance benefit be offset against damages. This policy is not present in the Railroad Retirement Act.

Under the Railroad Retirement Act, there is no policy objective of encouraging the purchase of insurance. Contributions to the RRA are not a matter of individual choice. They are not optional. They are mandated by federal law. Thus, the public policy reason underlying the collateral source rule is not present with respect to RRA benefits as it may be with respect to insurance policies purchased as a matter of individual choice. Applying the collateral source rule to RRA benefits provides double recovery windfalls to plaintiffs, without protecting any legitimate interests of those plaintiffs or furthering society's public policy interests.

Notwithstanding that the collateral source rule was adopted at a time of far different economic circumstances and that it is today the subject of increasing scrutiny and legislative abrogation [5], the important fact here is that the collateral source language in Eichel was attributable to stipulation and concession by the railroad in that case. The language is dicta. However, Eichel is now cited time and time again every week in FELA trials in the courtrooms of America as establishing black letter law that RRA benefits are of a collateral source.

B. Whether RRA benefits should be admissible in evidence in a FELA trial for purposes other than as an offset to damages should be expressly left to trial court discretion and not be a matter of per se rule exclusion

The Eichel court, having inferred by dicta that RRA benefits were from a collateral source and should therefore not be considered in mitigation of damages attributable to the employer, proceeded to consider the trial judge's discretionary exclusion of the benefits from evidence as "a motive for (petitioner's) not continuing work, and for his deciding not to continue going back to work after the last accident." Id. at 254. The Court of Appeals had concluded that the disputed evidence should have been admitted because its probative value outweighed the risk of prejudice. The Court of Appeals had therefore reversed the trial court's

---

[5] Goldsmith, A Summary of the Collateral Source Rule: The Effects of Tort Reform and Impact on Multistate Litigation, 53 J.AirL.&Com. 799 (Spring, 1988); McDowell, The Collateral Source Rule-The American Medical Association and Tort Reform, 24 Washburn L.J. 205 (1985); O'Connell, A Proposal to Abolish Contributory and Comparative Fault, With Compensatory Savings by Also Abolishing the Collateral Source Rule, Law Forum, Vol. 1979, No. 3; Unreason in the Law of Damages: The Collateral Source Rule, 77 Harv.L.Rev. 741 (1963-64); Cf. S. Sugarman, Doing Away With Personal Injury Law, 79 and 174-76 (1989) (collateral source rule should be applied where the funds are derived from private savings and other forms of family income and wealth, but should not be applied where the losses are covered by social security, worker's compensation, employment related health care plans, private pension plans and group disability insurance).

exercise of discretion. The Supreme Court disapproved of the Court of Appeals' substituting its discretion for that of the trial court.

Under FELA, an injured employee clearly has a duty to mitigate damages. Trejo v. Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., 568 F.2d 181 (10th Cir. 1977); Jones v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 800 F.2d 590 (6th Cir. 1986). However, under the RRA, an Act which was adopted at a different time than the FELA and for different purposes and which is not in any sense fault-based, a plaintiff like Giddens sustains a dollar-for-dollar decrease in RRA benefits for each dollar in excess of $400 per month earned in mitigation of damages. Thus, the FELA law requiring mitigation of damages is at cross-purposes with the RRA earnings limitation law. The RRA creates a disincentive to a FELA plaintiff to mitigate his damages by finding gainful employment.

When the jury is left ignorant of this fact and law and is unaware that a person like Giddens is already receiving over $18,000 annually in benefits primarily funded by the same railroad against which he is asking the jury to return a multi-million dollar verdict, the only natural juror assumption is that surely Giddens cannot work, because, if he could, he would not leave a job paying him $35,000 a year. However, what the jury did not know is that Giddens, while not working, was receiving in RRA benefits of over $18,000 (over half of what he earned while he was working for the railroad) and that he cannot earn over $400 per month without having those benefits decrease. Therefore, the jury's assumption that if Giddens could work, he would work, which is the only reasonable conclusion which the jury can reach from the evidence (or exclusion thereof), is not valid in fact.

The 1963 Eichel decision was prior to the 1972 adoption of the Federal Rules of Evidence, Rule 403 of which provides:

> Although relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence.

Here, the exclusion of the evidence is what results in unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, and frequently almost outright perjury in the courtrooms of America in FELA trials. In 1963, when Eichel was decided, there was not the proliferation of "experts" who compound the nature and extent of an injured plaintiff's damages to astronomical levels which exists today. This case is a good example.

At this trial, the evidence on damages started with the plaintiff's treating physician, followed by another physician who performed a functional capacity examination. The upshot of these two physicians' opinions was that Giddens had 18% body as a whole disability for his injury to his left, non-dominant hand. The plaintiff then produced a vocational "expert" who testified that Giddens' vocational prospects were bleak indeed, notwithstanding the fact, as the expert repeated on three occasions, that Giddens was a man who was "well-motivated" to return to work.[6] The economist then followed.

---

[6] This vocational expert was Dr. Bernstein whose testimony the trial court has found opened the door to receipt of RRA evidence after a prior trial. Although not relevant to the issues here presented, this case has been tried to three juries. None heard evidence of RRA benefits. The first jury returned a verdict of $400,000. The trial court granted a new trial based upon its failure to give a mitigation of damages instruction, and no appeal was taken. In the second trial, the jury returned a verdict of $1,400,000. The trial court again granted a new trial, this time because of an improper inflammatory closing argument by plaintiff's counsel and also because the Bernstein testimony about how "well-motivated" Mr. Giddens was to find gainful employment opened the door to evidence of

It is this type of mischief to which we refer when we say the exclusion of RRA benefit evidence leads to "almost outright perjury." Giddens, by virtue of his receipt of RRA benefits and threat of loss of some of those benefits if he did return to work, was "de-motivated" to return to work. Giddens knew it. The expert knew it. The trial judge and counsel knew it. The appellate courts knew it. The only persons who did not know it were the persons who most needed to know, the persons deciding what damages Giddens should receive, the jury.

It cannot be said that receipt of such evidence, which is clearly relevant and probative, is outweighed, let alone "substantially" outweighed, by the danger of unfair prejudice and confusion of the issues or misleading to the jury. To the contrary, the evil of the jury's being ignorant of the facts "substantially outweighs" any chance that the jury might "misuse" the facts. The jury should receive such evidence. It is not collateral source. It would not result in confusion or be misleading. It would contribute to, not endanger, fairness.

C. There is conflict among the Circuits and state courts of highest resort as to the important federal question presented by Eichel

Trial courts and courts of appeals with alarming regularity misconstrue and inconsistently apply the holding in Eichel and misapply it to cases under the FELA. A clear conflict between the circuits exist. For example, the First Circuit, in McGrath v. Consolidated Rail Corporation, 136 F.3d 838 (1st Cir. 1998), partially adopted the approach which we urge, the RRA benefits and the fact that Giddens was de-motivated under the RRA due to its earnings limitation. Although the new trial was affirmed on the basis of the improper closing argument, the Missouri Court of Appeals held that Giddens had not opened the door to the receipt of the RRA benefits and the RRA's earnings limitations. Giddens v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 937 S.W.2d 300, 303 (Mo. App. 1996).

---

i.e. in affirming a defense verdict and the District Court's exercise of discretion in allowing the receipt of RRA benefits under Rule 403, the court affirmed allowance of the evidence to show McGrath's lack of motivation to return to work. The court properly divined the true scope of the Eichel decision on this issue.[7] McGrath is thus in conflict with the opinion on which certiorari is sought here. However, even the McGrath court, like almost every other court in America, also falls into the easy trap created by Eichel of reciting that the RRA benefits are from a collateral source.

In stark contrast to McGrath, however, is Green v. Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad, 59 F.3d 1029 (10th Cir. 1995), where the Tenth Circuit clearly construes Eichel as establishing a bright-line rule excluding disability benefits as both collateral source and to establish malingering.[8]

The Ninth Circuit in Sheey v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co., 631 F.2d 649 (9th Cir. 1980), lines up with the Tenth Circuit in Green in apparently concluding that Eichel establishes a per se, black letter, bright-line rule against admissibility of RRA benefits. It concludes that "a

---

[7] "However we do not believe that the Eichel court established a bright-line rule barring the admission of collateral source evidence on the issue of malingering. The Supreme Court simply determined that the District Court abused its discretion because the prejudicial impact of the evidence outweighed its probative value. Here, we come to the opposite conclusion." 136 F.3d 838, 841.

[8] "If there is confusion in our cases it is unimportant, because we believe Supreme Court precedent controls this issue. As plaintiff asserts, Eichel v. New York Central RR, . . . compels the conclusion that the collateral source rule prohibits admission of RRA disability benefits in a FELA case. The narrow issue in Eichel was whether evidence of RRA disability payments was admissible to show malingering by the plaintiff. The Supreme Court stated that 'The likelihood of misuse by the jury clearly outweighs the value of this evidence' and noted that it had 'recently had occasion to be reminded that evidence of collateral benefits is readily subject to misuse by a jury.'" Id. at 1032.

District Court's Rule 403 discretion is greatly limited in FELA cases" under Eichel because the Supreme Court there balanced the probative value of such evidence against any unfair prejudice and determined that in such cases, "the value is greatly outweighed by possible prejudice." Id. at 652. The rub is, of course, again, that Eichel merely upheld trial court discretion under the facts of the Eichel case. Eichel did not establish a reasoned rule that the evidence is per se excluded in all cases.

D. Giddens manipulated the system to accrue his 20 years of service for RRA eligibility

As is stated in Point C. of the Statement of the Case, Giddens had 16 years of credited service at the time of his accident. Following the accident, he convalesced for a total of 28 months in three stints interrupted by his return to his same job and work for 15 months in two separate stints. During the periods of convalescence, KCS paid him wage continuation and made contributions on his behalf to Tier II. At the time Giddens stated he no longer could do the job, he also knew that he had sufficient accrued vacation pay and sick leave days that he could allocate those days to future months of service and thus obtain the necessary 240 months to qualify for his RRA disability pension. His "inability to work" coinciding with his accruing eligibility for the pension is not pure coincidence. It was design. Giddens is not the only rail worker to conclude that it is more difficult to work after he has accrued his RRA disability eligibility than it was before accruing such eligibility. Once rail workers have their RRA eligibility "in the bank," and receive legal advice that they can sue their employer under the FELA without a jury's hearing about such benefits, the incentive to retire and sue is strong.

E. As an alternative to admission of RRA evidence at trial before the jury, at the very least, KCS, and all railroads, should be allowed an offset against a plaintiff s damages determined by the jury in the amount of the present value of the RRA benefits so that the plaintiff not receive a windfall double recovery

The jury heard that Giddens had sustained a potential total wage loss of over $1,000,000. It did not hear that Giddens was receiving over $18,000 per year in RRA benefits from a fund principally contributed to by KCS. That the jury's verdict of $1,520,000 provided Giddens with a windfall double-recovery is patent and unarguable.

Although evidence of RRA benefits should be heard by the jury on other relevant issues such as an FELA's plaintiff's disincentive and de-motivation to find gainful employment and thereby mitigate his damages, if it is concluded that such evidence should not be heard by the jury, at the very least, a railroad should be entitled to a credit in the amount of 76.6% of past RRA benefits received and 76.6% of the present value of future benefits. In this case, applying the same projections and discount values utilized by the plaintiff's expert economist, KCS should be entitled to an offset against this double-recovery of $223,667.

An offset for such a benefit was allowed by the Tenth Circuit when the employer was a non-railroad employer in the case of EEOC v. Wyoming Retirement Systems, 771 F.2d 1425, 1431-32 (10th Cir. 1985). However, curiously and inexplicably, the same Tenth Circuit did not provide that such an offset should be allowed to a railroad in Green v. Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Company, 59 F.3d 1029 (10th Cir. 1995).

F. Conclusion

The two page opinion of this Court in Eichel celebrates its 38th birthday this year. Much has changed in the intervening 38 years. The cost to this railroad, not only in this case, but in literally hundreds of other FELA cases where employees are receiving RRA benefits and to the railroad industry and, ultimately, to society as a whole, is steep, multi-million dollars annually. This unwarranted judicially-sanctioned double-recovery windfall has lived too long a life.

The time has come for a full exposition of these issues, which never took place in the oft-misconstrued and mis-cited Eichel opinion.

II. The Missouri courts' requirement that FELA litigants utilize a form of verdict materially different from the form of verdict utilized in all other similar comparative negligence actions violates the supremacy, equal protection and due process clauses of the United States Constitution and conflicts with the decisions of this Court.

A. States may not discriminate against FELA actions

This Court has succinctly and simply summarized the obligation of state courts entertaining FELA cases:

> Nor may a State discriminate disadvantageously against actions for negligence under the [Federal Employers' Liability Act] as compared with local causes of action in negligence. . . . [A state satisfies its duty not to discriminate disadvantageously against FELA actions only when] all negligence suits in a State are treated in the same way, by the same mode of disposing equitable, non-jury, and common law jury issues . . . .

Dice v. Akron, Canton & Youngstown R.R. Co., 342 U.S. 359, 365, 367-68 (1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring, in part, and dissenting, in part) (citing Missouri ex rel. Southern Ry. Co. v. Mayfield, 340 U.S. 1, 4 (1950); McKnett v. St. Louis & San Francisco R.R. Co., 292 U.S. 230, 234 (1934) (emphasis added). The Missouri Approved Instructions ("MAI") for FELA cases violates this most basic and fundamental constitutional precept.

This case was submitted to the jury under FELA theories of comparative fault. At trial, petitioner proffered, and the trial court refused, instructions that adhered to the format required by MAI for instructing a jury in a "typical" comparative fault negligence case, i.e., a case involving every Missouri defendant other than an FELA railroad-defendant. Instead, the trial court gave, over petitioner's constitutional objection, the MAI instructions for FELA, which differ fundamentally from the typical Missouri comparative fault jury instructions.

The divergence between the two schemes is easily summarized. The MAI comparative fault instructions for all "non-FELA" cases charge the jury to make two critical determinations—(1) the parties' respective percentages of fault and (2) the plaintiff's total damages, if any fault is assessed against the defendant. Both of these jury findings of fact must be explicitly recorded on the verdict form. MAI 37.07.[9] Thus, in Missouri "non-FELA" comparative fault cases, the jury considers the evidence and makes and records its findings of fact and the trial court thereafter performs the legal and ministerial act of making the computation of reducing total damages by the percentage of fault assessed to a plaintiff.

The MAI scheme for instructing in FELA cases is inexplicably and unjustiably different. Missouri juries are charged in the required FELA damages instruction:

---

[9] The jury is further informed in the required damages instruction under the "non-FELA" comparative fault format:

> In determining the total amount of plaintiff's damages you must not reduce such damages by any percentage of fault you may assess to plaintiff. The judge will compute plaintiff's recovery by reducing the amount you find as plaintiff's total damages by any percentage of fault you assess to plaintiff. MAI 37.03.

> If you find plaintiff contributorily negligent as submitted in Instruction No.___, then your award must be determined by diminishing total damages in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to plaintiff.

MAI 8.02. Correspondingly, the required verdict form for FELA cases, MAI 36.01, allows for a recording only of a "net damages" amount and does not permit the jury to record either percentages of fault or total damages.[10]

Missouri state courts have a well-established duty under the United States Constitution to treat FELA cases "the same way" they treat other similarly situated negligence actions. By refusing petitioner's tendered instructions—the form of instructions and verdicts used by Missouri courts in all other negligence actions involving comparative fault—the trial court committed a constitutional error for which the only remedy is a new trial.

During the early 1900's, in response to state court resistance to hearing FELA cases, this Court handed down a series of decisions requiring that state courts treat FELA negligence actions the same way other negligence suits arising under state law are handled. To that end, the Court struck down a variety of other state schemes which discriminated against FELA actions. See, e.g., Mondou v. New York & New Haven R.R. Co., 223 U.S. 1, 57-59 (1912); see also New York v. U. S., 505 U.S. 144, 148 (1992).

Under the straightforward directions of this Court, state courts are constitutionally obligated to treat FELA negligence cases the same way other negligence cases are handled with regard to "disposing [of] common law jury issues." Missouri state courts do not.

---

[10] Demonstrating the inequity (inequality) of the present MAI scheme for instructing on FELA cases is the fact that the form of verdict required for FELA comparative fault cases is used in other Missouri cases only when there is no issue of comparative fault. MAI 36.01.

Here, the respondent's claims and petitioner's defenses were not treated the same as other similarly situated negligence claims being prosecuted in the state courts of Missouri. Missouri courts improperly discriminate against FELA actions by requiring use of MAI 36.01 and thereby violate the holding in Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones, 241 U.S. 181 (1916), that a railroad in an FELA action "has the Federal right to a fair opportunity to show in diminution of damages any negligence attributable to the employee." Id. at 183 (emphasis added).

B. The Missouri courts' requirement that FELA litigants utilize a form of verdict that precludes meaningful appellate review of the jury verdict violates the equal protection and due process clauses of the United States Constitution and conflicts with the decisions of this Court

1. The Missouri instructional scheme violates due process.

As a result of the disparate treatment afforded FELA action by the Missouri Approved Instructions, the total amount of plaintiff's damages and relative apportionment of fault of the respective parties are not recorded on the verdict form. Apart from being vague and confusing to lay jurors, these MAI instructions and procedure violate federal substantive law. As a result of MAI's disparate treatment of FELA cases, it is impossible for the parties or a reviewing court to determine from the final jury verdict:

a) the gross amount of damages found by the jury;

b) the jury's relative apportionment of fault between the plaintiff and the railroad; and

c) whether the procedure for FELA fault calculation, mandated by federal substantive law, was followed, or even whether a mathematical mistake was made by the jury.

These differences between the two Missouri schemes for instructing juries unconstitutionally discriminates against FELA cases and deprives petitioner of meaningful appellate review in violation of decisions of the United States Supreme Court as well as in violation of the equal protection, due process and supremacy clauses of the United States Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 2; U.S. CONST. amend. V, XIV.

For example, in this case, it is impossible to determine whether the jury's "net" verdict of $1,520,000.00 could have been the result of (a) finding Giddens 0% at fault, with gross damages of $1,520,000.00, or (b) finding Giddens 90% at fault, with gross damages of $15,200,000.00. Either finding would not withstand weight of the evidence scrutiny by an informed reviewing court. 0% fault to Giddens would be absurdly against the weight of the evidence on fault, as would $15,200,000 on damages. However, here, as the Missouri Supreme Court's opinion itself shows, the courts in Missouri are not informed.[11]

Given Giddens' status as the foreman on the job and his conduct in placing his hand in a position of obvious peril, if the jury did not attribute substantial comparative negligence to him, the verdict would have been against the weight of the evidence on negligence. However, given the instructional backdrop above set out, neither the trial court, in attempting to discharge its duty to determine whether the verdict was against the weight of the evidence nor the appellate courts, in attempting to discharge their like duty, knew what percentage of fault, if any at all, the jury attributed to Giddens. Also, neither court knew what total damages the jury determined for Giddens' damages. The opinion of the Missouri Supreme Court so establishes:

---

[11] Under Rule 78.02, Missouri Rules of Civil Procedure, a court may grant a new trial on the ground that a verdict is against the weight of the evidence.

> While the jury award of $1,520,000.00 based on this evidence was generous, particularly if the jury found Giddens to be contributorily at fault to a substantial degree, it was not so grossly excessive . . . that it shocks the conscience of the Court or causes this Court to believe that the jury award was based on passion and prejudice rather than on the evidence. Giddens v. Kansas City Southern, 29 S.W. 3d 813, 822 (emphasis added) (App. 14a).

It could be said that the language above indicates the court assumed Giddens' fault "to a substantial degree," but then concluded that the verdict was still merely "generous," not excessive. But the point is the reviewing court did not know what the jury found.

Obviously, the Missouri Supreme Court did not know "if" the jury found Giddens contributorily at fault to a "substantial degree," or, for that matter, to any degree. Thus, meaningful judicial review was effectively thwarted and petitioner was denied due process under the law. See, e.g., Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg, 512 U.S. 415, 426-29, 114 S.Ct. 2331, 2338-40 (1994); Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 499 U.S. 1, 20, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 1044 (1991) (both finding that due process requires that jury damage awards be subject to meaningful appellate scrutiny). Review of jury verdicts under the FELA scheme to determine if a verdict is against the weight of the evidence is thus blind.

2. The Missouri instructional scheme violates equal protection.

The MAI Committee's reasoning in support of its discrimination against FELA is erroneous. The MAI Committee assumes in its Comments that 45 U.S.C. § 53 requires the jury and not the judge to diminish damages. MAI 8.02 [COMMITTEE COMMENT (1991 REVISION)]. The cited statute, however, includes no such requirement, but merely states:

> [T]he fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee.

45 U.S.C. §53.

The opinion below gave short shrift to petitioner's constitutional arguments (App. 15-17a) by stating that counsel for the defendant did an inartful job of making a record at the instruction conference and in briefing the case before the Missouri Court of Appeals [12] and that the constitutional arguments were therefore "deemed abandoned." They were not abandoned. They were merely disregarded. Treating one class of citizens, railroads, differently from all other classes of citizens for no rational reason and thereby depriving that singular class of citizens, railroads, meaningful appellate review, is not within the concept of equal protection of the law. We ask that this Court apply equal protection as it was intended to be by the framers of the Constitution.

Missouri courts pay slavish adherence to the rule which they have adopted, Rule 70.02(b), Missouri Rules of Civil Procedure, that approved instructions "shall be given to the exclusion of any other instructions on the same subject," notwithstanding that the instruction and verdict form which those same courts have approved violate constitutional guarantees. Courts should protect the constitutional guarantees of equal protection, not be the source of their denial.

---

[12]The Missouri Supreme Court accepted discretionary transfer of the case on its order, Rule 83.04, Missouri Rules of Civil Procedure. However, it then entered its opinion without further briefing or argument.

3. The Missouri state instructional scheme is in conflict with instructions of the Eighth Circuit federal scheme and all other jurisdictions' schemes.

Further demonstrating the flaw of the MAI Committee's reasoning is that no other jurisdiction uses a "net damages" approach, but instead all other federal and state jurisdictions utilize the "total damages/percentages of fault" approach that the MAI Committee asserts is improper. See, e.g., PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS [CIVIL] FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT § 7.08 (1995); PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS [CIVIL] FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT § 5.1 (1995); St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grider, 321 Ark. 84, 900 S.W.2d 530 (1995); O'Ryan v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 255 Ill. App.3d 214, 626 N.E.2d 374, 193 Ill. Dec. 341 (1993); Missouri Pacific R.R. Co. v. Brown, 862 S.W.2d 636 (Tex. App. [Tyler] 1993); Topping v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 1 F.3d 260 (4th Cir. 1993); Sinclair v. Long Island R.R., 985 F.2d 74 (2d Cir. 1993); Janke v. Duluth & Northwestern R.R. Co., 489 N.W.2d 545 (Minn. App. 1992); PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS [CIVIL] FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT § 6.1 (1990); Wilson v. Burlington Northern R.R. Co., 804 F.2d 607 (10th Cir. 1986); Merando v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co., 232 Kan. 404, 656 P.2d 154 (1982).

In Roth v. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co., 912 S.W.2d 583, 591 (Mo. App. [W.D.] 1995), a Missouri Court of Appeals refused to address this same constitutional objection:

> At the outset, we acknowledge strict adherence to MAI forms and "Notes on Use" is required by our Supreme Court and recall its admonition that `[i]f this court is to make this system work, and preserve its integrity and very existence, we must insist that mandatory directions be followed and that the pattern instructions be used as written.

Simply because the questioned instructions are "approved" instructions, however, does not remedy or erase the constitutional taint.[13] City of Chesterfield v. Director of Revenue, 811 S.W.2d 375, 378 (Mo. 1991) Bennett v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 896 S.W.2d 464, 467 (Mo. 1995). This Court previously was confronted with similar stubborn-as-a-Missouri-mule reliance on MAI and rejected such reliance when federal substantive rights were involved. See St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. v. Dickerson, 470 U.S. 409, 411 (1985). As in Dickerson, the constitutional error committed by the trial court cannot be justified by "approved" instructions.

Both the Missouri Court of Appeals, in Roth, and the Missouri Supreme Court here have been asked to address the "merits" of the discriminatory and unconstitutional Missouri instructional scheme. Both have declined. Missouri courts are obviously loathe to address the "merits" of the instructional scheme which they themselves have approved because there is no "merit" to the scheme. It is indefensible.

---

[13] Under the applicable state law, petitioner preserved its constitutional attack on the Missouri Approved Instructions by timely offering alternative instructions and by raising its constitutional objections orally at the instruction conference and in writing at the earliest opportunity "consistent with good pleading and orderly procedure [i.e., the new trial motion]." City of Chesterfield v. Director of Revenue, 811 S.W.2d 375, 378 (Mo. 1991) (en banc). The Missouri Supreme Court has noted:

> Before the [objected to] instructions were given to the jury, counsel objected. . . . A similar complaint was included in the motion for new trial that the instructions [were unconstitutional]. This was sufficient to inform the plaintiff and trial court of the basic flaws in the instructions and to preserve the issue on appeal.

Bennett v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 896 S.W.2d 464, 467 (Mo. 1995) (en banc).

CONCLUSION

Two important federal (and constitutional) questions of impact not only to this case, but to all railroad citizens trying cases in the State of Missouri, under its unique instructional scheme, and to all railroad citizens nationwide, under the Eichel decision, are presented by this Petition. Full briefing and exposition of the issues in Eichel and its progeny are overdue. So is the indefensible State of Missouri instructional scheme. The Court should grant the petition.

Respectfully submitted,

HARLAN D. BURKHEAD*
TODD E. HILTON
LATHROP & GAGE L.C.
2345 Grand Boulevard, Suite 2500
Kansas City, Missouri 64108
(816) 292-2000

Counsel of Record* Counsel for Petitioner

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A

SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI,
EN BANC

No. SC 82602

GARRY V. GIDDENS,

Respondent,

v.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,

Appellant.

Oct 17, 2000
Rehearing Denied Nov. 14 2000

PER CURIAM.[1]

In 1989 Garry V. Giddens was injured while working for his employer, Kansas City Southern Railway Company (KCS). The injury occurred when a chain attached to a crane broke causing a track assembly to fall on Giddens' hand. Treatment for the hand injury included eight surgeries. Despite the treatment, Giddens was unable to return to work. He then filed suit against KCS under the Federal Employer's Liability Act (FELA). In this third trial of the suit, the trial court entered a $1,520,000 judgment for Giddens.[2] KCS

---

[1] This appeal was originally decided by the Court of Appeals, Western District, in an opinion by the Honorable Laura Denvir Stith. Portions of that opinion are incorporated without further attribution.

[2] At the first trial in 1994, the jury awarded Giddens $500,000. The trial court granted a new trial due to failure to give an instruction on mitigation of damages. At the second trial in April 1995, the jury awarded Giddens $1,400,000. The trial court again awarded a new trial, this time on the basis of an improper closing argument by Giddons' counsel.

appeals the judgment, asserting six claims of error. Finding that the trial court committed no prejudicial error, the judgment is affirmed.

Considered in the light most favorable to the verdict, the evidence at trial showed: In 1989, Giddens was a foreman for KCS' maintenance-of-way department, which constructs and maintains the railroad's roadbeds and right-of-way. In May 1989, heavy rains in Louisiana caused "wash-outs," i.e., areas where the ballast under the ties and the rail are washed away, leaving the rail and ties suspended without roadbed support. Wash-out repair was not within Giddens' general duties, but KCS assigned him and his crew to washout repair.

On May 18, 1989, Giddens' supervisor, Larry Dobson, instructed him to begin repair work at milepost 612 and told him that a KCS locomotive crane would be there. Giddens and his crew were told to use the chains located on the crane to lift the tracks out of the way while cross-tie supports were inserted underneath the tracks.

On May 19, Giddens and his crew began to repair the wash-out damage at milepost 612. Giddens had never before performed wash-out repair by using a crane. At the work site, a division engineer instructed Giddens to use a backhoe to move all of the old fill and mud in the surrounding area underneath the suspended track. This would build a foundation more quickly than would stacking the cross-tie support. The engineer said that, if the old mud did not completely refill the hole under the tracks, Giddens and his crew could "shim" the landfill by taking ties and building a box structure on top of the fill.

Giddens and his crew climbed up the sides of the mud-filled foundation in order to build up a mini-crib on top of the mud. As Giddens inserted a tie underneath the track, he placed his left hand on top of the tie to steady himself. While his hand was on top of the tie, the chain from the crane holding the track assembly broke, causing the suspended track to drop and pin Giddens' left hand between the tracks and the tie at the top of the crib. After approximately three to five minutes, those at the scene were able to attach the chain back to the crane and lift the track off Giddens' left hand.

Giddens received hospital emergency treatment and was subsequently treated by a hand specialist. He suffered crush-type fractures of the middle, ring, and small fingers of his left hand. Several reconstructive surgeries were performed on his left hand to repair the damage. While Giddens was receiving the initial treatment for his hand injury, he was not permitted to return to work. He remained on KCS' payroll through its wage continuation program.

Giddens' injury was sufficiently severe that he was not released to return to work for KCS until June 1990. In December 1990, Giddens left work for vacation and additional tendon surgery. He returned to work in May 1991. In December 1991, Giddens again took a vacation and underwent additional surgery. Two months later, Giddens attempted to return to work, but a KCS physician disqualified him from work because of safety concerns regarding his ability to lift heavy objects. Subsequent surgeries followed. In the summer of 1992, Giddens attempted to return to work again, but failed a KCS field test. At this time, Giddens was notified that he would be taken off the wage continuation program as of October 1992.[3]

Giddens filed this suit in November 1992. He filed interrogatories and a request for production asking for the names of persons who had obtained written statements from Giddens, including a video or motion picture of him, and for copies of those statements and videotapes. No videotapes were taken at that time.

---

[3] Although Giddens was taken off KCS' wage continuation program, he remained eligible for disability pension benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act.

Before the third trial, KCS hired an investigator to watch Giddens. The investigator made videotapes of his surveillance in April 1997. These were sent to counsel for KCS on May 16 and June 3. The videotapes showed Giddens performing various activities, including raking leaves, sweeping and clearing natural debris, breaking tree branches and sticks, carrying tree limbs, gathering trash, and mowing the lawn with a push mower. In some parts of these videotapes, Giddens appeared to be using his injured hand to hold or push items.

On July 3, KCS conducted a supplemental deposition of Giddens. The existence of the videotapes had not been disclosed to Giddens. At the deposition, counsel for KCS again questioned Giddens concerning the physical limitations associated with his injured hand-this time specifically addressing the types of activities captured on the video surveillance. KCS asserts that Giddens' answers as to his ability to perform various activities were seriously at odds with what the videotapes showed he could do in at least ten respects. According to Giddens, his testimony and the videotapes are not inconsistent, since the questions were vague or dealt with abilities not depicted in the videotapes in various respects.

On July 8, KCS served an amended discovery response advising Giddens of the existence of the videotape surveillance. Giddens' attorneys subsequently deposed the investigator who performed the video surveillance. He explained when and how he obtained the videotapes and sent them to counsel for KCS.

Giddens then filed a motion to exclude the video surveillance tapes from evidence on the basis that KCS failed seasonably to divulge information regarding the videotapes by keeping them secret until after Giddens' supplemental deposition. The motion also requested such other relief as the court deemed proper, including striking KCS' pleadings or imposing other sanctions.

Giddens' motion was not ruled until the day of trial January 13, 1998. The judge held that KCS had violated discovery rules by failing seasonably to supplement its interrogatory answers concerning its videotape "statements" of Giddens. The judge did not exclude the videotapes as a sanction for the discovery violation, however, because he believed the tapes might be needed so that the jury could see what activities Giddens could perform. Instead, he sanctioned KCS by prohibiting use of Giddens' post-surveillance deposition testimony, even for impeachment purposes.

At trial, Giddens testified about his physical condition and limitations. His answers were consistent with what the videotape surveillance showed about his condition. His prior trial testimony was not used to impeach him. His testimony was not fully consistent with portions of his excluded deposition testimony, which indicated a more limited physical capacity.

Giddens also provided testimony from three expert witnesses, including: (1) a railroad specialist who testified as to the alleged deficiencies in KCS' operations; (2) a psychologist-rehabilitation specialist who testified as to his injuries and his rehabilitation; and (3) an economist who testified as to his lost wages. Giddens further introduced OSHA regulations allegedly violated by KCS as evidence of KCS' negligence in operating and maintaining the work site.

The court entered judgment in accordance with the jury's verdict. All KCS post-trial motions were overruled. KCS appeals.

KCS challenges the submissibility of Giddens' case and argues that the trial court erred in failing to grant its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV). The standard of review of denial of a JNOV is essentially the same as for review of denial of a motion for directed verdict. A case may not be submitted unless each and every fact essential to liability is predicated upon legal and substantial evidence. Houghton v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co., 446 S.W.2d 406, 409 (Mo. banc 1969). In determining whether the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict, the evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to the result reached by the jury, giving the plaintiff the benefit of all reasonable inferences and disregarding evidence and inferences that conflict with that verdict. Id. This Court will reverse the jury's verdict for insufficient evidence only where there is a complete absence of probative fact to support the jury's conclusion. Seitz v. Lemay Bank and Trust Co., 959 S.W.2d 458, 461 (Mo. banc 1998).

Under FELA, the employer has a duty to provide its employees with a reasonably safe place to work. If the employer's negligence plays any part, even the slightest part, in producing the employee's injury, then a submissible case is made. Qualls v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 799 S.W.2d 84, 85-86 (Mo. banc 1990). Contributory negligence by the employee will not bar recovery but may diminish the amount of recovery in proportion to the amount of employee negligence. Wilmoth v. Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. Co., 486 S.W.2d 631, 636 (Mo.1972).

KCS asserts an exception to the usual comparative fault rule applies here because, as foreman, Giddens was in charge of the job site and assumed an independent duty to follow KCS' safety rules. Those rules precluded him from putting his hand under the railroad tracks while they were raised. However, the cases cited by KCS conflict with the adoption of a comparative fault system under which employee negligence is not used as a complete bar to recovery, but merely as a reduction to the recovery. Id. KCS' reliance on Walker v. Lykes Bros. S.S. Co., 193 F.2d 772 (2nd Cir.1952), is misplaced as it is a Jones Act case rather than a FELA case.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Giddens, there was evidence that Giddens was inexperienced in both crane use and wash-out repair, that KCS failed to provide the proper equipment to perform the wash-out repair, and that the working conditions were unsafe. A jury could reasonably infer from this evidence that KCS was negligent in providing an unsafe work environment and that its lack of care played at least some part in Giddens' injury. Although KCS' evidence contradicted Giddens' testimony, and although KCS argues that its testimony was more credible and cast serious doubt on Giddens' version of events, it was up to the jury to make its own credibility determinations as well as any inferences of negligence from the evidence.

The trial court did not err in overruling KCS' JNOV motion.

KCS also challenges errors by the trial court in ruling on the admission of evidence, in imposing sanctions for discovery violations and in instructing the jury. The trial court is vested with broad discretion regarding rulings on the admission of evidence and the imposition of sanctions for discovery violations. Judicial discretion is abused when the trial court's ruling is clearly against the logic of the circumstances then before the court and is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to shock the sense of justice and indicate a lack of careful consideration. Anglim v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 832 S.W.2d 298, 303 (Mo. banc), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1041, 113 S.Ct. 831, 121 L.Ed.2d 701 (1992). The failure to submit an instruction to which a party is entitled is error, but such error will warrant reversal only when the merits of the action have been materially affected and when the error is properly preserved. See Goff v. St. Luke's Hosp. of Kansas City, 753 S.W.2d 557, 564 (Mo. bane 1988).

KCS asserts the trial court erred in concluding that KCS failed seasonably to supplement discovery and in imposing a discovery sanction by barring introduction of Giddens' videotaped deposition testimony at trial. KCS asserts that: (1) its supplementation of its interrogatory answers was seasonable in that it notified Giddens of the videotapes at least seven months prior to trial, and (2) even if its supplementation was not seasonable, barring introduction of the deposition testimony for impeachment purposes was error because it prevented the jury from knowing that Giddens had previously testified under oath inconsistently with his testimony at this trial and, thus, was not a credible witness.

Here, the trial court imposed a sanction for a discovery violation in connection with a failure to reveal timely the videotape surveillance of Giddens. Rule 56.01 allows discovery of a party's statements concerning the action, as follows:

> A party may obtain without the required showing a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that party. For purposes of this paragraph, a statement previously made is: (a) a written statement signed or otherwise adopted or approved by the person making it, or (b) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, audio, video, motion picture or other recording, ~~or~~ a transcription thereof, of the party or of a statement made by the party and contemporaneously recorded.

Rule 56.01(b)(3) (emphasis added). A videotape of a party constitutes a "statement" of the party within the meaning of Rule 56.01. State ex rel. Missouri Pacific v. Koehr, 853 S.W.2d 925 (Mo. banc 1993). The video surveillance tapes in this case are discoverable.

As previously noted, by interrogatories propounded in 1993, Giddens asked KCS whether it had any knowledge of videotapes of Giddens taken since the time of the accident. In its original response, KCS answered in the negative, for at that time it had no such videotapes. Under Rule 56.01(e), a party has an obligation seasonably to amend its answer to an interrogatory if an initial response becomes inaccurate due to later events. That rule requires:

> (e) Supplementation of Responses. A party who has responded to written interrogatories with a response that was complete when made is under no duty to supplement the response to include information thereafter acquired, except as follows:
>
> * * * *
>
> (2) A party is under a duty to amend a prior response seasonably if the party obtains information upon the basis of which a party knows that the response (A) was incorrect when made or (B) though correct when made is no longer true.

Rule 56.01(e) (emphasis added).

Here, the parties agree that under Koehr and Rule 56.01(e) KCS had a duty seasonably to supplement its prior interrogatory answers by informing Giddens in writing of the existence of the videotapes. The parties disagree whether KCS' supplementation was "seasonable" and whether the court properly sanctioned KCS.

The construction given by the federal courts to their rules does not control the interpretation of our state rules, even if the rules themselves are nearly identical. However, the experiences of those courts in applying rules similar to our own are illustrative; Martin v. City of Washington, 848 S.W.2d 487, 495 (Mo. banc 1993). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(e)(2) is similar to our Rule 56.01(e). Both require a "seasonable" amendment to prior responses to interrogatories. For purposes of the federal rule, supplementation need not be made as each item of information is learned but should be made at appropriate intervals during the discovery period, with special promptness as the trial date approaches. Fed. R.Civ.P. 26(e), Advisory Committee Note 1993. In this case, the videotapes were disclosed within two months of the time they were made and seven months before trial. This is more than sufficient time to allow a party to prepare for trial.

Giddens contends that consideration of the time to prepare for trial is not the only criteria. He urges that he was prejudiced because the videotapes were not disclosed prior to his last deposition. Revelation of the videotapes prior to the supplemental deposition could only be prejudicial if Giddens were to lie at his supplemental deposition, and the rules are not intended to provide a means by which a plaintiff may avoid the truth or avoid being caught in a lie. If Giddens is completely truthful in his answers to questions propounded at the deposition, then no prejudice occurs. Although the time to prepare for trial is not the only factor in determining if a supplemental disclosure is seasonable, in this case Giddens fails to show any prejudice or any other factor indicating a lack of seasonable supplementation. Koehr does not require a different result. That case involved answers to interrogatories in the first instance not supplementation. The trial court abused its discretion in finding that the videotapes were not seasonably disclosed.

Although the trial court erred by imposing a sanction for KCS' alleged discovery violation, the sanction imposed did not prejudice KCS. The court permitted the videotapes to be shown to the jury. The jury, thus, heard and saw relevant evidence relating to the extent of Giddens' physical injuries.

KCS appears to suggest that the deposition testimony should have been admitted simply to impeach the general credibility of Giddens. It was not prevented, however, from impeaching Giddens with respect to any specific testimony by use of the videotape or with his prior testimony from the first or second trial on first or second deposition. The use of the other materials was sufficient to ensure that the jury had the information necessary to evaluate the testimony properly. The trial court's sanction, although erroneous, did not prejudice KCS.

KCS next asserts that the trial court erred in permitting Giddens' counsel to read and display to the jury certain regulations promulgated under the Occupational Safety and Health Act, 29 U.S.C. sections 651, et seq. (OSHA). The OSHA regulations at issue concerned the type of chains used on the locomotive crane that lifted the railroad track and the OSHA requirements that such chains be tested, inspected, and labeled for their appropriate use. John Edwin Blaylock, a division engineer, and Larry Dobson, KCS' company representative, testified to KCS' compliance with OSHA regulations. Both witnesses testified that they were not familiar with the OSHA regulations. During closing argument, Giddens' counsel referred to the OSHA regulations, argued KCS' duty to know applicable OSHA regulations, and to follow them, and argued KCS' conduct failed to meet these OSHA regulations when it failed properly to test, inspect and tag the chains.

OSHA regulations offered as evidence of the standard of care owed by a party are competent evidence relevant to the question of negligence. See Schneider v. Union Elec. Co., 805 S.W.2d 222, 229 (Mo.App.1991). Moreover, such rules and regulations promulgated pursuant to federal statutes may be judicially noticed and considered as evidence. See Kawin v. Chrysler Corp., 636 S.W.2d 40, 44 (Mo. banc 1982). A trial court may permit pertinent rules of this type to be read into evidence and a violation of the substance of pertinent rules may be hypothesized as evidence supporting a jury finding of negligence. Id.; Hough v. Rapidair, Inc., 298 S.W.2d 378, 383 (Mo. banc 1957).

KCS argues that the OSHA regulations Giddens introduced into evidence were not in effect at the time of the accident in 1989; the regulations from the 1984 volume of the Code of Federal Regulations were offered at trial. KCS does not dispute, in its reply brief, Giddens' contention that the relevant regulations remained the same from 1979 to 1993. Giddens presented sufficient evidence of the relevance and applicability of the OSHA regulations at issue to allow their admission.

Finally, while KCS argues that Giddens used the OSHA regulations as a basis for arguing negligence per se, the OSHA regulations were used only to support the argument that KCS breached a standard of care it owed to its employees by violating the regulations. For this purpose, the regulations were competent evidence that could be considered by the jury, along with other evidence bearing upon the question of KCS' negligence. See, e.g., Schneider, 805 S.W.2d at 229. Negligence per se was neither argued nor submitted. Therefore, it was not error for the trial court to admit evidence of the OSHA regulations and their alleged violation by KCS.

As it was not error to admit the OSHA regulations, KCS' argument that the trial court erred in failing to give the jury an instruction withdrawing from its consideration evidence of the regulations and of KCS' alleged violation of them is rejected.

KCS asserts the trial court erred in failing to find that the amount of the jury verdict was against the weight of the evidence in that: (1) the $1,520,000 award was so grossly excessive as to indicate bias, passion and prejudice on the part of the jury; (2) there was insufficient evidence to support the amount of the award; and (3) the amount of the award was so large as to show that the jury failed to follow the court's instruction that Giddens had a duty to mitigate damages.

The standard of review of a claim that the trial court erred in failing to find the verdict excessive is a narrow one: an appellant must show both that the verdict is excessive and that some event occurred at trial that incited the bias and prejudice of the jury. The mere size of the verdict does not in and of itself establish that it was the result of bias or passion and prejudice without showing some other error was committed during the trial. Means v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 550 S.W.2d 780, 788 (Mo. banc 1977). KCS has failed to meet this standard, for it has failed to identify any trial event that could have caused the bias and prejudice it claims occurred. The errors specifically alleged have not been found to be meritorious; therefore, they cannot serve as a predicate for a finding of excessiveness of the verdict.

KCS also fails to meet the second prong of the excessiveness test by showing that the size of the verdict is so grossly excessive as to shock the conscience because it is glaringly unwarranted. In reviewing verdicts to determine if they are excessive, appellate courts overturn only those verdicts that are obviously out of line and grossly improper. To obtain relief on the basis of excessive verdict, the defendants must demonstrate that the verdict is glaringly unwarranted so as to shock the conscience of the court. Tune v. Synergy Gas Corp., 883 S.W.2d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 1994). The test applied by appellate courts is not fine-tuned and should not be; the appellate courts generally defer to the jury's decision as to the amount of damages. This is as it should be because the determination of the amount of damages is a task that lay juries are particularly able to perform. Id.

Here, as a result of the accident, Giddens sustained permanent injury to his left hand, limiting the dexterity and overall strength in his left arm. The injury was sufficiently severe that he was unable to work for one year after the injury and required repeated surgeries and consequent additional month off work while he recovered. A disability evaluation rated Giddens at a 30% disability of the left upper extremity and an 18% disability of the body as a whole. At the time of trial, Giddens was 44 years old with a high school education.

Giddens' entire work history consisted of heavy labor for the railroad. He was ultimately let go by the railroad because he was unable to continue employment in this line of work due to his injury. A rehabilitation specialist testified that Giddens' future employment opportunities would be limited to areas of light and sedentary work requiring minimal use of the left hand. The specialist offered the opinion that, even were Giddens able to find employment of this nature, it most likely would be an unskilled, minimum wage job and that, because of Giddens' injury, it was reasonable to expect he would suffer periods of unemployment. A professor of economics testified that the present value of Giddens' total lost earnings ranged from a high of $1,017,019, to a low of $541,836, depending on when Giddens would have retired and whether he would be able to find minimum wage employment.

While the jury award of $1,520,000 based on this evidence was generous, particularly if the jury found Giddens to be contributorily at fault to a substantial degree, it was not so grossly excessive, in light of the amount of his past and potential future lost wages and in light of his injuries, pain and suffering, that it shocks the conscience of the Court or causes this Court to believe that the jury award was based on passion and prejudice rather than on the evidence.

In its next point, KCS objects to the manner in which the trial court directed the jury to record its damage determinations.

In most Missouri cases the jury is asked to determine a total amount of damages and the percentage of fault of plaintiff and of defendant, and the jury is told that the judge will reduce the total damages awarded by the percentage of fault attributed to plaintiff. See, e.g., MAI 37.03. FELA, however, requires the jury rather than the judge to diminish the total damages by the comparative fault of the plaintiff. 45 U.S.C. sec. 53. For this reason, the jury in FELA cases is instructed that after it determines the sum of damages to which it believes plaintiff is entitled as a result of the defendant's conduct, "If you find plaintiff contributorily negligent as submitted in Instruction Number _____ then your award must be determined by diminishing plaintiff's total damages in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to plaintiff." MAI 8.02. The Committee Comment to MAI 8.02 explains this variance:

> The submission of comparative fault in an F.E.L.A. case differs from the method in Chapter 37.00 for use in cases based on Missouri law. F.E.L.A. cases are governed by federal law. Under 45 U.S.C. Sec. 53, the jury diminishes damages in proportion to the employee's negligence. Under Chapter 37.00, the jury determines total damages and plaintiffs percentage of fault but the judge makes the actual computation diminishing total damages to the amount recoverable by plaintiff.

MAI 8.02, Committee Comment (1996 Revision).

KCS objected to instructing the jury in accordance with MAI 8.02 on the basis that this instruction "unconstitutionally discriminates against railroads by instructing in FELA cases differently than in other similar comparative fault cases." KCS never elaborated on this objection by explaining for the trial court how or why this alleged discrimination was unconstitutional, and the trial court overruled the objection. In this Court, KCS now argues that the instruction and verdict form are unconstitutional in that they treat railroads differently from other negligent defendants and that this violates the Missouri and United States constitutions' due process, equal protection and supremacy clauses.

KCS has failed to preserve its claim that the manner of submitting FELA cases violates the Missouri constitution. It nowhere cites to provisions of the Missouri constitution that are allegedly violated (Missouri, of course, has no supremacy clause), nor does it argue how they are violated. It limits the argument portion of its brief to a discussion of the alleged violation of federal law and the federal constitution. We accordingly do not further address its claims of violation of the Missouri Constitution. Beatty v. State Tax Comm'n, 912 S.W.2d 492, 498-99 (Mo. banc 1995).

KCS does allege in its argument in this Court that due process is violated because the parties and the appellate courts have no means of determining whether the jury correctly made its mathematical computations in diminishing total damages by the amount of plaintiff's negligence or whether it properly reduced total damages by plaintiff's fault in the first instance. It urges that this denies meaningful judicial review. This is not the same argument that KCS made to the trial court below. There, it argued not that the instruction was vague or ambiguous, or denied the parties meaningful appellate review, but rather that the instruction unconstitutionally discriminated between FELA and non-FELA cases. Where an alleged error on appeal relating to an instruction differs from the objections made to the trial court, the error may not be reviewed on appeal. Seidel v. Gordon A. Gundaker Real Estate Co., Inc., 904 S.W.2d 357, 364 (Mo.App.1995); see State v. Hankins, 642 S.W.2d 606, 611 (Mo. 1982). This portion of KCS' argument also is not preserved.

The bulk of KCS' argument in this Court on the issue of submission of damages asserts that the distinction between how the jury records its damage verdict in FELA and non-FELA cases constitutes unconstitutional "discrimination" against FELA cases. It never explains in the argument portions of its brief how this alleged discrimination rises to a constitutional level, or what constitutional provisions are violated or how the violation occurs. In its point relied on, KCS suggests a violation of the equal protection clause, but it never refers to that clause in its argument nor does it cite any cases supporting an equal protection claim. That argument is deemed abandoned.

While KCS also fails to refer to the supremacy clause directly in the argument section of its brief, it does support its discrimination argument by citing to a number of federal cases that have struck down state laws discriminating against the bringing of FELA actions. See, e.g., New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 112 S.Ct. 2408, 120 L.Ed.2d 120 (1992); Dice v. Akron, Canton & Youngstown R.R. Co.. 342 U.S. 359, 72 S.Ct. 312, 96 L.Ed. 398 (1952); Mondou v. New York & New Haven R.R. Co., 223 U.S. 1, 32 S.Ct. 169, 56 L.Ed. 327 (1912). It notes these cases do not allow a state to "discriminate disadvantageously against actions for negligence under the Federal Act as compared with local causes of action in negligence." While most of these cases do not address the supremacy clause issue, Mondou and McKnett v. St. Louis & S.F. Ry. Co., 292 U.S. 230, 54 S.Ct. 690-78 L.Ed. 1227 (1934), cite that clause as a basis for striking down application of state law in FELA cases regarding jurisdictional issues. Mondou, 223 U.S. at 57-59, 32 S.Ct. 169.

Here, however, KCS has not identified any way in which Missouri is discriminating disadvantageously against actions for negligence under FELA. It is simply objecting to how Missouri allows the jury to record its damage verdict in such cases, not to law governing the standards under which such damages may be awarded or the amount of damages that may be awarded. KCS cites no authority for the proposition that it is disadvantageous to FELA actions if jury instructions are not identical in FELA and non-FELA cases, and none is found. Moreover, none of these cases addresses the issue now raised by KCS, that it is unconstitutional to require a jury to break out its damages and comparative fault determination separately in non-FELA cases but not in FELA cases. Accordingly, KCS' constitutional arguments are rejected.

In its last point on appeal, KCS asserts the trial court erred in refusing to admit evidence of Giddens' Railroad Retirement Disability Benefits. As a general rule, evidence of a plaintiffs receipt of disability pension payments under the Railroad Retirement Act is inadmissible at trial under the "collateral source doctrine" because its probative value is outweighed by its potential prejudicial effect on the jury. Eichel v. New York Cent R.R. Co., 375 U.S. 253, 84 S.Ct. 316, 11 L.Ed.2d 307 (1963). Numerous rationales have been used to justify the application of the collateral source rule. See Washington by Washington v. Barnes Hosp., 897 S.W.2d 611, 619 (Mo. banc 1995). KCS argues, however, that the rationale behind exclusion of collateral source payments does not apply to Giddens' pension benefits, since they are funded, at least in part, by the railroads themselves. Eichel forecloses this argument.

Nevertheless, KCS argues that an exception to the collateral source rule has been recognized where the plaintiff injects his financial condition into a case. Moore v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 825 S.W.2d 839, 842-43 (Mo. banc 1992). KCS is precluded from raising this issue by the law of the case doctrine. The general rule is that the decision of a court is the law of the case for all points presented and decided, as well as for matters that arose prior to the first adjudication and might have been raised but were not. The court's decision remains the law of the case throughout all subsequent proceedings, both in the trial and appellate courts. Shahan v. Shahan, 988 S.W.2d 529, 533 (Mo. banc 1999). This doctrine applies in this case because the issue of whether the testimony of the rehabilitation specialist as to Giddens' motivation to work opened the door for introduction of evidence of Giddens' pension benefits was determined unfavorably to KCS in the first appeal of this case. Giddens v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 937 S.W.2d 300, 305 (Mo. App. 1996). KCS is not free to re-litigate this issue now.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

LIMBAUGH and COVINGTON, JJ., concur; WOLFF, J., concurs in separate opinion filed; WHITE and BENTON, JJ., concur in opinion of WOLFF, J.

PRICE, C.J., and HOLSTEIN, J., not participating.

MICHAEL A. WOLFF, Judge, concurring.

The trial judge was correct in determining that the railroad and its attorneys violated the duty seasonably to supplement, under our Rule 56.01(e), as to the existence of surveillance videotapes of plaintiff Gidden. We should interpret the word "seasonably" to refer to the time standard for interrogatories. Applying the time standard for interrogatories to this case, the railroad had an obligation to correct its answer to the interrogatory within 30 days after it learned that it had videotapes of Giddens.

"We have come a long way since the days of the 'sporting theory of justice.' State ex rel. State v. Riley 992 S.W.2d 195, 197 (Mo. banc 1999). Pre-trial discovery performs important and legitimate functions. Liberal discovery aids in overall trial preparation, narrowing of issues, promotion of early settlements, and most importantly, the ascertainment of truth. Our rules should be interpreted to promote the search for truth and evenhandedly minimize game playing by lawyers on both sides of counsel table.

The supplementation rule promotes the search for truth. It eliminates the need for periodic waves of repetitive interrogatories. Prior to the 1970 version of Federal Rule 26, upon which our Rule 56.01 is based, federal decisions recognized that a court, in ordering a party to answer an interrogatory, could expressly provide that the interrogated party was under a continuing duty to supplement in light of new information. Some courts held that the discovering party itself could make the interrogatories continuing by so providing in its interrogatories, while other courts refused to allow this. See 8 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ARTHUR R. MILLER & RICHARD L.

MARCUS, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE sec. 2048 (2d ed.1994).

Rule 56.01(e) requires a party "seasonably" to supplement its interrogatory answers as to the identity of witnesses, including experts, or when the party learns that an interrogatory response was incorrect when made or is no longer true. If we were to deem these interrogatories as continuing, then the duty "seasonably" to supplement would logically incorporate the time limit in our Rule 57.01(a), which in this instance would be 30 days after the date that "the party obtains information upon the basis of which the party knows that the response (A) was incorrect when made or (B) though correct when made is no longer true." Rule 56.01(e)(2).

There is no reason the time limit for supplementing an interrogatory answer should be different from the time limit for answering an interrogatory in the first place.

The use of the word "seasonably" in the rule, rather than specific reference to time limits, recognizes the flexibility needed when a trial date is imminent, which was not the case here. The court of appeals in State ex rel. Missouri Highway and Transportation Commission v. Pully, 737 S.W.2d 241, 244-45 (Mo.App.1987), reads the word "seasonable" to mean "reasonable." In cases where trial is imminent, use of a 30-day time limit would be unreasonable. This interpretation would track the flexibility given in Rule 57.01(a) for the court to allow a shorter or longer time than 30 days for the answering of interrogatories. The presumption in all cases should be that the 30-day time limit for interrogatories applies to the duty to supplement. The presumption is overcome where circumstances, such as the timing of the trial setting or pretrial discovery order, warrant a shorter or longer time. No such circumstances appear in this case.

If a party with a surveillance videotape wishes to withhold that evidence from discovery until the plaintiff has been deposed, the party—in this case the railroad— should seek a protective order under Rule 56.01(c) or an order under Rule 56.01(d) as to the sequence and timing of discovery. To fail-to disclose even the existence of such materials, which have properly been requested, does not further the search for truth and violates our discovery rules.

Federal courts sometimes permit a delay in production of a plaintiffs statements by issuing a protective order allowing the defendant to delay disclosure of statements until after the plaintiff's deposition has occurred. See Torres-Paulett v. Tradition Mariner, Inc., 157 F.R.D. 487, 489 (S.D.Cal.1994); Smith v. Central Linen Service Co., 39 F.R.D. 15, 18 (D.Md.1966). Where no protective order has been requested, federal courts have held that the statement must be produced. See, e.g., Willard v. Constellation Fishing Corp., 136 F.R.D. 28 (D.Mass. 1991). The same protective order provisions are available under our Rule 56.01(c).

With due respect to the federal precedents, a motion for protective order does not precisely fit this situation, because the grounds for such an order are "to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense."[1] The more appropriate motion, it seems

---

[1] Rule 56.01(c) provides:

> (c) Protective Orders. Upon motion by a party or by the person from whom discovery is sought, and for good cause shown, the court may make any order which justice requires to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense, including one or more of the following:
>
> (1) that the discovery not be had;
>
> (2) that the discovery may be had only on specified terms and conditions, including a designation of the time or place;
>
> (3) that the discovery may be had only by a method of discovery other than that selected by the party seeking discovery;
>
> (4) that certain matters not be inquired into, or that the scope of the discovery be limited to certain matters;

to me, is a motion under Rule 56.01(d)[2] which allows the court, "in the interest of justice," to set the sequence of discovery.[3] Thus, under this provision, a court could order that the videotapes be withheld until the plaintiff's deposition has been taken. Rule 56.01(c) requires a party to show "good cause" to obtain a protective order, and Rule 56.01(d) recites "as justice requires." The federal trial court cases cited above suggest that a defendant would be entitled to a protective order by simply asserting that the defendant wants the benefit of an unrefreshed recollection of the facts. Other trial judges, however, might require a party to show, by reference to pleadings and discovery, the possibility that a plaintiff's claims may be overblown.

---

(5) that discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court;

(6) that a deposition after being sealed be opened only by order of the court;

(7) that a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be disclosed or be disclosed only in a designated way;

(8) that the parties simultaneously file specified documents or information enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court.

If a motion for a protective order is denied in whole or in part, the court may, on such terms and conditions as are just, order that any party or person provide or permit discovery. The provisions of Rule 61.01 apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion.

(Rule 56.01(c) is similar to federal Rule 26(c).)

[2] (d) Sequence and Timing of Discovery. Unless the court upon motion, for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interests of justice, orders otherwise, methods of discovery may be used in any sequence and the fact that a party is conducting discovery, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall not operate to delay any party's discovery.

[3] Our Rule 56.01(d) is similar to federal Rule 26(d).

Requiring a party possessing statements or surveillance video to move for an order will prevent knowing concealment of discoverable materials that have been properly requested. When a party is required to seek an order to withhold disclosure of such material temporarily, the defendant may still have the benefit of getting the plaintiff's version of the facts on the record before producing a statement that might affect plaintiff's testimony. An order should also ensure that the plaintiff will have the statement in time to prepare for trial.

This interpretation would have the salutary effect of ensuring that the deponent is careful not to exaggerate, because the deponent cannot be sure what written or videotaped statement may be produced in discovery after the deposition. See 23 AM JUR. 2d Deposition and Discovery sec. 46 (1983).

In this case, when plaintiff's counsel was served with a notice that his client was to be deposed again, the railroad should have moved for an order allowing it not to disclose the videotaped surveillance until after the deposition was taken. If such a motion is not required, the option is for plaintiff's counsel to file a specific request for supplementation of the previous interrogatories, or a repetitive set of interrogatories, and then go to the court to have the time shortened for the responses so that the attorney can get answers before the client's deposition. While our Rule 56.01(e)(3) allows for such repetitive requests, we should not clutter up the discovery process by encouraging their use.

When we interpret the word "seasonably" as presumptively incorporating the time limits of the interrogatory rules, we have a more precise standard for determining when the supplementation rule is violated. In this case, the railroad was required to disclose the videotapes no later than June 15, and July 3, 1997, which were 30 days following the respective dates on which the railroad's attorney received the two videotapes. However, the videotapes were not disclosed until July 8, 1997, after the plaintiff's deposition was concluded. Under this standard, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing a sanction on the railroad for failing seasonably to supplement its answers.[4]

If we uphold the trial judge's conclusion that the railroad violated its duty "seasonably" to supplement its interrogatory answers, then the trial judge's sanction— prohibiting use of the deposition at trial— makes sense. The resolution by the trial judge furthered the trial as a search for truth. The trial judge appropriately allowed the railroad to use the surveillance videos to minimize the plaintiff's injuries. What the trial judge prohibited was the use of the alleged "gotcha" deposition; at most the deposition may have shown that Giddens had previously exaggerated his injuries or the extent of his disability. Juries of course do penalize plaintiffs, sometimes in the measure of damages, if they believe a plaintiff has exaggerated, lied, or is a malingerer. What the railroad was deprived of, in this instance, was perhaps the opportunity for some jury justice that would not have been legally relevant to the real issues in the case, i.e., whether the railroad was negligent and what were the nature and extent of the plaintiff's injuries.

I would uphold the trial judge's resolution of this issue. I concur in the result reached by the principal opinion, and in the analyses of the other issues in the principal opinion.

---

[4] The deposition was held on July 3, 1997. It is possible that the second videotape would not have been seasonably produced, under this standard. But certainly the first videotape, from May 15, 1997, would have been disclosed, or an appropriate order sought

APPENDIX B

[Filed Nov. 1, 2000]

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI

GARRY V. GIDDENS
Plaintiff/Respondent,

v.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Defendant/Appellant.

APPELLANT KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN'S MOTION FOR REHEARING

Comes now appellant. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, pursuant to Rule 84.17, and moves that the Court grant rehearing on the Opinion of the Court filed on October 17, 2000 and, in support thereof, appellant states:

> With respect to the issue of timeliness of supplementation of discovery responses and the trial court's sanction imposed (Opinion Per Curiam Op. 8-12):

1. In stating: "(Giddens' trial) testimony was not fully consistent with portions of his excluded deposition testimony," Per Curiam p. 6. and that "The (excluded) deposition may have shown that Giddens had previously exaggerated his injuries or the extent of his disability", Concurring Opinion. p. 6, the Opinion has overlooked material matters of fact in the case, i.e. that the wrongfully excluded deposition testimony was not just a matter of not being "fully consistent" or an "exaggeration." It was lies. See Exhibit "A" hereto.

2. The Per Curiam Opinion's conclusion that although the trial court abused its discretion and erred in excluding Giddens' deposition testimony, such did not result in prejudice to the defendant overlooks the material matter of fact that the plaintiff's testimony here as to the defendant's alleged negligent conduct contributing to cause his injury was largely uncorroborated and thus was subject to only the same "guarantee of trustworthiness" (i.e. Mr. Giddens' truthfulness) as Mr. Giddens' testimony as to the extent of his injuries. That the finder of fact in this case, the jury, was not allowed to hear Mr. Giddens' sworn deposition testimony, which was clearly relevant and material and admissible under Rule 57.07 and the other authorities cited, did result in substantial prejudice to the Kansas City Southern. The finder of fact was prevented from hearing and considering that a person who, at the time of giving his sworn deposition testimony, was prepared to lie to them as to the extent of his injuries would be just as inclined to lie as to the cause of his injuries. This is not a matter of the appellant's being deprived of "the opportunity for some jury justice that would not have been legally irrelevant to the real issues in the case," Concurring Opinion p. 6, it is a matter that the appellant was denied the opportunity for jury justice period.

3. Ten years ago, prior to the amendment to Rule 56.01(b)(3), making surveillance materials discoverable as a "statement" of the plaintiff, Mr. Giddens would have come into this courtroom and testified exactly as he did in his deposition, which was excluded. Defendant would then have shown the videotape clearly establishing the falsity of that testimony. Mr. Giddens, had he received any verdict whatsoever at the hands of the jury, would surely not have received $1,520,000. Again, this is not "jury justice" on an irrelevant issue, unless truth in the courtroom is irrelevant and the right to test and impeach testimony is no longer relevant in the adversarial system. This does not indicate progress in the law.

With respect to the excessiveness of the verdict and judgment (Per Curiam Op. 13-16):

4. In holding (Per Curiam Opinion p. 14): "The errors specifically alleged have not been found to be meritorious; therefore, they cannot serve as a predicate for a finding of excessiveness of the verdict," the Per Curiam Opinion overlooks the fact that the Per Curiam Opinion did find that the specification of error pertaining to the seasonability of the supplementation of discovery responses and the trial court's erroneous imposition of sanctions was meritorious. The Per Curiam Opinion merely dismisses such meritorious specification of error as being non-prejudicial.

5. The Opinion further overlooks and misinterprets existing law in that, in order for an appellate court to find excessiveness of verdict the irregularity occurring at trial need not rise to the level of reversible error standing by itself. It need only be an "error or occurrence sufficient to incite prejudice." Smith v. Archbishop of St. Louis, 632 S.W.2d 516 (Mo. App. 1982):

> To successfully claim that the award is so excessive as to show jury prejudice defendant must present evidence of some error or occurrence at trial sufficient to incite prejudice. Id. at 524. (Emphasis added)

With respect to the specification of error that the jury was wrongfully instructed with respect to its damage determinations (16-19):

6. The Opinion itself, when it states "While the jury award of $1,520,000 based on this evidence was generous, particularly IF the jury found Giddens to be contributorily at fault to a substantial degree. . . ." proves the very point which Kansas City Southern attempted to make in this case. This Court does not know what the jury found regarding Mr. Giddens' fault. Neither did the Court of Appeals. Neither did the trial court. The reason they did not is the erroneous MAI damage instruction given to them by the trial court.

The Per Curiam Opinion says, p. 17, that the appellant abandoned this point by not explaining for the trial court how MAI unconstitutionally discriminates against railroads. This issue was "explained" and argued thoroughly to the trial court, more off the record than on. That is why, when the trial court went on the record to record the instructions, the court said: "All right. I want to go, finally over the instructions on the record." (emphasis added) (Tr. 565).

Even in the very brief record made, counsel for appellant, objected on the record to the jury instructions which are peculiar under MAI to Federal Employers' Liability Act cases, only i.e.:

> Defendant objects to the form. We will concede that this adheres to proper MAI format. We object because we believe MAI unconstitutionally discriminates against railroads by instructing in FELA cases differently than in other similar comparative fault cases. (Tr. 566)

And then further, specifically with respect to MAI 8.02, counsel for appellant stated: "We think (8.02) ought to be modified as per other comparative fault cases." (Tr. 568) True, the words "equal protection" do not appear of record. However, we respectfully submit that what "equal protection" is all about is equal treatment of citizens under the law which, the MAI instructional scheme is not.

We respectfully disagree with the Court's comment, Per Curiam Op. 19: "Here, however, KCS has not identified any way in which Missouri is discriminating disadvantageously against acts of negligence under FELA." What the Missouri instructional scheme for FELA cases does, by not requiring the jury to state percentages of fault which it has found, effectively thwarts meaningful review of a jury's verdict either by a trial court or an appellate court. It thus does, in the most fundamental sense, "discriminate disadvantageously" against the KCS and railroads. That this Court did not know what the jury found is clearly established from the Court's Opinion, Per Curiam Op. P. 15, "While the jury award of $1,520,000 based on this evidence was generous, particularly IF the jury found Giddens to be contributorily at fault to a substantial degree, . . ." (emphasis added) establishes that neither this Court nor the trial court could know "if," because of the instructional scheme which does discriminate disadvantageously against KCS and all railroads in FELA trials. The Opinion thus overlooks material matters of fact, law and the briefing before it in this regard.

With respect to the specification of error that the jury should have been allowed to know that Mr. Giddens was receiving a Railroad Retirement Board disability pension funded by this defendant (Per Curiam Op. 19-20):

7. The Per Curiarn Opinion. p. 20, dismisses this contention under "the law of the case doctrine." True. this matter was determined unfavorably to the KCS in the plaintiff's appeal of this case. Giddens v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 937 S.W.2d 300, 305 (Mo. App. 1996). However, this version of Giddens was an opinion of the Missouri Court of Appeals. The Missouri Supreme Court is not bound, under the law of the case doctrine, by an opinion of a lower court.

CONCLUSION

The jury in this case, the fact finder, was prevented from hearing impeachment fact evidence which had a direct, substantial and prejudicial effect on its excessive verdict. Thus, the jury, for no good, but erroneous, reasons, was operating partly in the dark. Similarly, when it came time for the trial court, the Court of Appeals and this Court to attempt to review the propriety of the jury's verdict, all of these courts were precluded from meaningful review by reason of the fact that none of the courts has any idea of what percentages of fault were found or what total damages the jury assessed.

This is because of an unconstitutionally defective instructional scheme applicable only in Federal Employers' Liability Act cases, which "discriminates disadvantageously" against railroads because they are effectively denied their right of judicial review of a jury's verdict. Thus, in certain material respects, the jury did not know, and in other material respects, the reviewing courts do not know. Justice this blind is no justice at all.

Respectfully submitted

LATHROP & GAGE L.C.

/s/ Harlan D. Burkhead
HARLAN D. BURKHEAD #22239
2345 Grand Boulevard
Kansas City, MO 64018
(816) 292-2000 FAX: 292-2001
An Attorney for Defendant/Appellant

APPENDIX C

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Your home there in Pollock, do you do your yard work there?

A. My kids do.

Q. You don't do any of it or do you do some of it?

A. I try to get out of all of it. I have to supervise, make sure—because they're still young, but they do it.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Do you do yard work now?

A. Yes, sir, I can do my yard work.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you rake?

A. Not really good. I can prop it on this hand and do like that, but we don't rake the yard anyway.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you rake?

A. I can.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you sweep, for instance, with your—

A. I sweep with my right hand.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1.21.98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you sweep?

A. Yes, sir.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you twist things with your left hand?

A. No. Like a jar or something?

Q. Right.
A. No. I have to use my right hand to open it.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you twist with your left hand?
A. Can I twist? To a degree yes. My wrist, yes.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/87, Ex. 89

Q. Can you use your left hand, for instance, to break things like if you were breaking a stick between your left and right hand?
A. No.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you go out and break sticks?
A. I can break with my right hand. I can hold them to a degree, with these fingers, in my left, yes.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you carry limbs in your left hand?
A. I pull them with my right hand. I might if they're little ones. I could stack them in my arm.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Do you carry limbs?
A. I can carry limbs.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Like if you're picking up trash and throwing it, could you throw it with your left hand?
A. No, I don't—I don't know.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Have you thrown trash?

A. I can throw trash. I can do any of that. You know, as long as I don't overload myself, I can do just about any of that, yes.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Are you able to use your left hand to pull things?
A. No, sir.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you pull on things?
A. I can.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you use it to hold things and carry things?
A. No, sir.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you carry things?
A. To a certain weight, yes.

* * * *

DEPOSITION TESTIMONY, 7/3/97, Ex. 89

Q. Can you, for instance, push a lawn mower?
A. If—I can push a little bit with my right hand.

TRIAL TESTIMONY, 1/21/98, Tr. 399, et seq.

Q. Can you push?
A. Yes.

APPENDIX D

[Logo]

CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT
STATE OF MISSOURI
POST OFFICE BOX 150
JEFERSON CITY, MISSOURI 65102

THOMAS F. SIMON
CLERK

TELEPHONE
(573) 751-4144

November 14, 2000

Mr. Harlan D. Burkhead
Suite 2800
2345 Grand Boulevard
Kansas City, MO 64108-2684

In Re: Garry V. Giddens vs. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company Missouri Supreme Court No. SC82602

Dear Mr. Burkhead:

Please be advised that the Court entered the following order on this date in the above-entitled cause:

"Appellant's motion for rehearing overruled. Price, C.J., and Holstein, J., not participating."

Very truly yours,

THOMAS F. SIMON

/s/ Cynthia L. Turley
CYNTHIA L. TURLEY
Deputy Clerk, Court en Banc

cc:
Mr. Patrick S. O'Brien

APPENDIX E

INSTRUCTION NO. 10

If you find in favor of plaintiff, then you must award plaintiff such sum as you believe will fairly and justly compensate plaintiff for any damages you believe plaintiff sustained and is reasonably certain to sustain in the future as a result of the occurrence mentioned in the evidence. Any award of future pecuniary damages must be included at present value. Any award you make is not subject to income tax. If you find that plaintiff failed to mitigate damages as submitted in Instruction Number 8, in determining plaintiff's total damages you must not include those damages which would not have occurred without such failure. If you find plaintiff contributorily negligent as submitted in Instruction Number 7, then your award must be determined by diminishing plaintiff's total damages in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to plaintiff.

MAI 8.02 [1996 Revision]

Submitted by plaintiff Garry Giddens

APPENDIX F

VERDICT

NOTE: Complete this form by writing in the name required by your verdict.

On the claim of plaintiff Garry Giddens for personal injuries against defendant Kansas City Southern Railway Company, we, the undersigned jurors, find in favor of:

_____

(Plaintiff Garry Giddens) or (Defendant Kansas City Southern Railway Company)

NOTE: Complete the following paragraph only if the above finding is in favor of plaintiff Garry Giddens.

We, the undersigned jurors, assess the damages of plaintiff Garry Giddens at $_____(stating the amount).

NOTE: All jurors who agree to the above must sign below:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

MAI 36.01 [1980 Revision]

Submitted by plaintiff Garry Giddens

APPENDIX G

DEFENDANT'S INSTRUCTION CC

If you assess a percentage of fault to defendant in Verdict A, then, disregarding any fault on the part of plaintiff, you must determine the total amount of plaintiff's damages to be such sum as will fairly and justly compensate plaintiff for any damages you believe he sustained and is reasonably certain to sustain in the future as a result of the accident mentioned in the evidence. Any award of future pecuniary damages must be included at present value. Any award you make is not subject to income tax. You must state the total amount of plaintiff's damages in your verdict.

If you find that plaintiff failed to mitigate damages as submitted in Instruction Number ___, in determining plaintiff's total damages you must not include those damages which would not have occurred without such failure.

In determining the total amount of plaintiff's damages you must not reduce such damages by any percentage of fault you may assess to plaintiff. The judge will compute plaintiff's recovery by reducing the amount you find as plaintiff's total damages by any percentage of fault you assess to plaintiff.

NOT IN MAI

MAI 8.02 [1996 Revision] modified by MAI 37.03 [1986 New] (modified)

Submitted by defendant The Kansas City Southern Railway Company

APPENDIX H

DEFENDANT'S INSTRUCTION EE

Note: Complete the following paragraph by filling in the blanks as required by your verdict. If you assess a percentage of fault to any of those listed below, write in a percentage not greater than 100%, otherwise write in "zero" next to that name. If you assess a percentage of fault to any of those listed below, the total of such percentages must be 100%.

On the claim of plaintiff Garry Giddens for personal injury against defendant KCS, we, the undersigned jurors, assess percentages of fault as follows:

Defendant KCS	____% (zero to 100 %)
Plaintiff Garry Giddens	____% (zero to 100 %)
TOTAL	____% (zero to 100 %)

Note: Complete the following paragraph if you assessed a percentage of fault to defendant.

We, the undersigned jurors, find the total amount of plaintiff's damages for personal injury, disregarding any fault on the part of plaintiff to be $_____ (stating the amount).

Note: The judge will reduce the total amount of plaintiff's damages by any percentage of fault you assess to plaintiff.

Note: All jurors who agree to the above must sign below.

_____

_____

_____

NOT IN MAI

MAI 37.07 [1986 New] (modified)

Submitted by defendant The Kansas City Southern Railway Company

APPENDIX I

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

No. 480

EICHEL

v.

NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

Dec. 16, 1963.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner, who had been employed by respondent New York Central Railroad for 40 years, brought this action against respondent under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 35 Stat. 65, as amended, 45 U.S.C. § 51 et seq., in the District Court for the Southern District of New York. The complaint alleged that in 1960, as a result of respondent's negligence petitioner suffered a permanently disabling injury. The jury returned a verdict of $51,000 for petitioner and the District Court entered judgment in accordance with that verdict. Respondent offered evidence that petitioner was receiving $190 a month in disability pension payments under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, 50 Stat. 309, as amended, 45 U.S.C. § 228b(a) 4.

This evidence was offered for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of petitioner as to his motive for not returning to work and as to the permanency of his injuries. The trial court excluded the evidence in response to the objection of petitioner's counsel. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed, holding it prejudicial error to exclude the evidence of the disability pension, and remanded "for a new trial, limited, however, to the issues of injury and resulting damages * * *." 2 Cir., 319 F.2d 12, 14. The court affirmed the judgment as to the determination of negligence." Ibid. We grant certiorari and reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

Respondent does not dispute that it would be highly improper for the disability pension payments to be considered in mitigation of the damages suffered by petitioner. Thus it has been recognized that:

> "The Railroad Retirement Act is substantially a Social Security Act for employees of common carriers. * * * The benefits received under such a system of social legislation are not directly attributable to the contributions of the employer, so they cannot be considered in mitigation of the damages caused by the employer." New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Leary, 1 Cir., 204 F.2d 461, 468, cert. denied, 346 U.S. 856, 74 S.Ct. 71, 98 L.Ed. 370.[1]

Respondent argues that the evidence of the disability payments, although concededly inadmissible to offset or mitigate damages, is admissible as bearing on the extent and duration of the disability suffered by petitioner. At the trial counsel for respondent argued that the pension would show "a motive for [petitioner's] not continuing work, and for his deciding not to continue going back to work after the last accident." On the basis of this argument the Court of Appeals concluded that the disputed evidence should have been admitted because: "Its substantial probative value cannot reasonably be said to be outweighed by the risk that it will * * * create substantial danger of undue prejudice through being considered by the jury for the incompetent purpose of a set-off against lost earnings." 310 F.2d, at 20.

---

[1] See Sinovich v. Erie R. Co., 3 Cir., 230 F.2d 658, 661; Page v. St louis S. Ray. Co., 5 Cir., 312 F.2d 84, 94. see also Gregory and Kalven, Cases and Materials on Torts (1959), pp. 480-482; McCormick, Damages (1935), p. 310 n. 2; Comment, 38 Mich.l.Rev.1073.

We disagree. In our view that likelihood of misuse by the jury clearly outweighs the value of this evidence.[2] Insofar as the evidence bears on the issue of malingering, there will generally be other evidence having more probative value and involving less likelihood of prejudice than the receipt of a disability pension. Moreover, it would violate the spirit of the federal statutes if the receipt of disability benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, 50 Stat.309, as amended 45 U.S.C. § 228b(a) 4, were considered as evidence of malingering by an employee asserting a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. We have recently had occasion to be reminded that evidence of collateral benefits is readily subject to misuse by a jury. Tipton v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., 375 U.S. 34, 84 S.Ct. 1.[3] It has long been recognized that evidence showing that the defendant is insured creates a substantial likelihood of misuse.[4] Similarly, we must recognize that the petitioner's receipt of collateral social insurance benefits involves a substantial likelihood of prejudicial impact. We hold therefore that the District Court properly excluded the evidence of disability payments. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed and the case remanded for proceedings consistent with his opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS concurs in the result.

Mr. Justice HARLAN, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

---

[2] Cf. McCormick, Evidence (1954), c. 19; 2 Wigmore, Evidence (1940), § 282a.

[3] See Kalven. The Jury, the Law, and the Personal Injury Damage Award, 19 Ohio St. LJ 158, 169.

[4] See notes 1-3, supra.

Once again I am obliged to record my view that certiorari should not have been granted in a case of this kind, involving only a question of the admissibility of evidence in a suit under the Federal Employers' Liability ACT, 35 Stat. 65, as amended, 45 U.S.C. § 51. See my dissenting opinion in Tipton v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., earlier this Term, 84 S.Ct., p.3.

On the merits, I agree with the majority that the judgment below should be reversed, but for different reasons. Whether or not evidence that the petitioner was receiving disability pension payments under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 50 Stat. 307, as amended, 45 U.S.C. § 228a, should have been admitted depends on a balance between its probative bearing on the issue as to which it was offered, in this case the respondent's claim that petitioner was a malingerer, and the possibility of prejudice to the petitioner resulting from the jury's consideration of the evidence on issues as to which it is irrelevant. When a balance of this sort has to be struck, it should, except in rare instances, be left to the discretion of the trial judge, subject to review for abuse. See Uniform Rules of Evidence, Rule 303. It is he who is in the best position to weigh the relevant factors, such as the value of the disputed evidence as compared with other proof adducible to the same end and the effectiveness of limiting instructions. Believing that this rule should have been followed here, I concur in reversing the judgment below, which not only held the evidence not inadmissible as a matter of law but also directed its admission on retrial.

For the same reasons, however, I dissent from the majority's holding that the evidence is required to be excluded. I see no reason why evidentiary questions should be given different treatment when they arise in an F.E.L.A. case than when they arise in other contexts

APPENDIX J

---

§ 51. Liability of common carriers by railroad, In Interstate or foreign commerce, for Injuries to employees from negligence; employee defined

Every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

Any employee of a carrier, any part of whose duties as such employee shall be the furtherance of Interstate or foreign commerce; or shall, in any way directly or closely and substantially, affect such commerce as above set forth shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as being employed by such carrier in such commerce and shall be considered as entitled to the benefits of this chapter.

(Apr. 22, 1908, c. 149, § 1, 35 Stat. 65; Aug. 11, 1939, c. 685, § 1, 53 Stat. 1404.)